Dear Hiring Professional,

My name is Amelia McGovern, and I am a rising junior studying Industrial Design at the Rhode Island School of Design (RISD) with a concentration in product design. I am a hardworking and imaginative designer eager to collaborate with and learn from your team. I am especially passionate about the intersection of creative production, intentional design, and sustainable practices.

At RISD, I have built a strong foundation in physical making and material research. My work often involves biodesign and foundational color theory, where I analyze systems to create functional, storytelling visuals. I am constantly expanding my technical toolkit through studios focused on material innovation and functional prototyping. Whether working on digital graphics or physical models, I prioritize clarity and intentionality in my process.

Beyond my coursework, I bring strong leadership and coordination skills from my background as an art teacher and summer camp supervisor. I am highly comfortable managing community outreach, developing creative curriculum, and ensuring programs run smoothly. My experience also includes designing promotional materials for artists and collaborating on multidisciplinary teams, such as the Brown University Fashion Club and the Brown-RISD crochet club.

I am a flexible, self-motivated creator who enjoys the research process and supporting teams through organized documentation and clear communication. I would love the opportunity to contribute my skills and learn at every stage of your creative process.

I look forward to the opportunity to discuss how my design background and coordination skills can support your team.

Thank you for the opportunity to share my work!

Sincerely,

Amelia McGovern
